London's new epicurean bar championing women winemakers

Just last month the Parisian wine expert, Carole Bryon, opened her first wine bar in Covent Garden, London, creating a place for wine enthusiasts to try different fine wines from the around the world. What really makes this new wine bar stand out though is the focus Bryon is placing on organic, biodynamic and natural wines while also championing the world's most inspiring women winemakers.

Régine Sumeire, Château la Tour de l'Evêque, France

Régine sumeire has been working as a winemaker for a long time having begun when there weren't many women in the wine industry at all. She tried to make different kind of wine for Provence, she succeeded and now everyone is doing it the same way. Sumeire is credited for making the paler style of rose that people enjoy today.
